SELLING BANANAS BY WEIGHT.

After this when one goes into some of the fruit and grocery stores of Portland to purchase bananas it will not be correct to say, "I'll have a dozen bananas," or two dozen, as the case might be. The correct way of putting it in the order will be to say: "I'll have a pound or two." This change in the manner of measuring the sale has lately come in vogue among a few of Portland's retailers, and it is said that it will spread to them all. Within the last six weeks many of the wholesale houses have been selling bananas to the retailers by weight, and they in turn are disposing of them to the consumers in the same manner. On account of the varied size of the popular fruit the dealers say that it is a much easier way to purchase them, and by this method they are able to a greater degree of certainty to regulate their profit.—Kennebec Journal.
